WASHINGTON LETTER

Congress in its S ond Ses ion - The

(From our Regular Correspondent)

WASHINGTON DEC 1 1890. Speaker Reed, as the hands on the b g clock facing him indicated noon, called the House to order and formally declar ed the second session of the Fif y first Congress open and ready for business. After prayer by the chaptain the Presi dent's message was received. When the Cierk began reading the message many of the members were listless or in ent upon reading newspapers or writ-ing letters; but as the burning wo ds of ing letters; but as the burning wo ds of patriotism and party loyalty, which not even the sing song tones of the professional reader could make duil, began to pour forth every form was creek and the closest attention was paid to every word. Speaker Reed's face was a study as the reading of the message proceeded He smiled most expressively, and from time to time nodded his head in a man ner which said as plain as anything ner which said as plain as anything could "those are my sentiment;" and oc casionally brought his chubby hands to getner, as if to congratulate himself for eing a m mber of the same party as the man who could write such a ringing Mosby. First Baptist Church and timely message just after his party (Manchester, Va.,) Deacons: A has been defea ed

The democrats too paid close atten The democrats too paid close after tion to the reading of the message, but their faces did not beam with satisfaction at the strong points as did those of the republicans. Republicans are all congratulating the President and the opinion is universal among them that the message in one of the best ever sent to Congress, and it is no exaggeration to say that it has made Mr. Harrison more popular with republicans in both branches of Congress than he has ever been before, and the party leaders ex press the belief that it will put an effect tive quietus upou the small, very small Second Bantist Ch minority of the party in Congress that lost their heads over the result of the Devotional execuwilling to abandon one of the cardinal principles of the Republican party to

The cry is forward forward, and the marching will be done to the same old party music that has led the party to its greatest trlumphs in the past, which will be repeated in the future. just as certain as intelligence al ways in the course of time gets control of ignoranc. The R publicans are still in control of both branches of Congress; and republican ideas will dom'naie al. the legislation passed between this and the fourth day of next March, and in spite of democratic threats, howls and appeals the original republican programme, mapped our long before the 78. His quotation from Rev. Dr. elections, is to be carried out to the let

Mrs. Harrison has gone on the long deferred visit to her old Indianapolls home. She would have gone several weeks ago, but the President wished her to stay and take part in the reception tendered to the Brazilian naval officers, who came here to present this Government with a gold medal for its Rev. A. P. Dunbar delivered the charge, and the services were concluded by the extending of the band of fellowship by Deacon Morton Deane. Benediction by Rev. Evans Payne.

I had a very interesting talk this

I had a very interesting talk this morning with Representative Dunnail, chairman of the House Committee, on the census, and author of the apportion ment bill, which was introduced at the last session, and referred to that Committee. He says there will be no delay in reporting an appointment bill, and that is will be along the line of his bill, the difference between the estimated and actual population of the country being the only draw back to the bin just as it stands, and that, he thinks, can easily be remedied. I asked him what file thought of the proposition to reduce instead of increase the number of Representatives. He eald: 'It will not do at all. Representatives are near not do at all. Representatives are nearly worked to death now, and to increase the number of constituents which each of them have to represent means to increase their work. You may be sure that the apportionment law enacted this winter, will increase the membership of the House to at least 350 -I am permuch greater." From another source I learned that it is proposed to amend the apportion-ment bill in such a manner as to forevr er stop the State Legislatures from making partisan gerrymanders of the Congressional District: Certainly such a law is badly needed when the Damo crats are openly threatening to gerry mander every state in which they control the Legislature in such a way as to practically shu out the Republicans.

Some uneasiness was felt when the House opened this morning without a quorum of Republicans; but from dingent inquiry I am certain that a querum of Republicans will be here this terday he was convicted of forgery week, and I believe that they will re and sentenced to five years in the main here continuously to the end, at penitentiary. least they say they will, and if they don't, their political future is not to
